Morning ██████

There was a row of about 10 Lime e-bikes at the bus station in Finsbury Park this morning that have clearly been lined up by a distribution team rather than left by customers. They are between the bus stops and the entrance to the platforms in the main part of the station and there is no room for them, the footfall there is absolutely huge in the morning and evening peaks.

I spoke to one of the staff who said they'd not authorised them being left there, and that they had been reported. Please can you ensure they are removed without delay? By lunchtime ideally, and grateful if you could confirm when they are gone.

Thanks

I am indeed going to the Como thing at about 12:15, though if we've met immediately before you'll probably hear me say quite a bit of the same stuff twice. Let's start out catch up at 10:45 instead of 11.

Looking forward to seeing you tomorrow.

Just wanted to see if you might be able to meet 15 or 30 mins earlier than we'd scheduled? No problem if that's not possible. I've just now got to get to a CoMo meeting at 11.30 (which I think you're actually coming to part of as well?) but happy to go along and be slightly late if necessary.

Cheers

Hi Mike,

Hope you're well.

I'm getting in touch to introduce myself - as I've recently started as Director of Policy for Lime in the UK.

I understand you've had some previous conversations with a couple of my colleagues - including [REDACTED], our UK General Manager - around Lime's e-bike plans in London. I believe you were interested in some of the data sharing we've done in other cities, and a few data points relating to our existing business in places like Paris and Berlin.

If you have any time over the next few weeks, I'd love to come and introduce myself in person, and would be very happy to give you a demo of the data dashboard we usually give to cities when we launch our range of products. This shows data points like average ride length, number of journeys per e-bike/e-scooter, and geographic data about where journeys are happening. I can also bring you up to date with our plans for potential UK - and London - launches in the next few months.

From my end, I'd be very interested to get an update on TfL's code of conduct, and how it relates into discussions around a future bylaw governing dockless bike share schemes.

I'm based in London full time, so can be pretty flexible to fit around your schedule if there's a particularly convenient time for you?

Best wishes

As discussed the week before last - just wanted to drop you a quick email to confirm details of our London launch of e-bikes tomorrow.

I see Mark from the Standard has been in touch, so assume you're aware, but we're beginning our London service with 1000 bikes in Ealing and Brent. We have had the full support of both Councils and their leaders, which has been great.

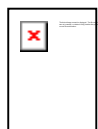

We'll be going out to other media in the next few hours so hope to see some wider pick up.
