London Fashion Week Activation

Tfl & Burberry – Two truly iconic organisations

Burberry is a global fashion label with a strong British heritage and an instantly recognisable visual identity. Similarly, TfL is known for some of the most iconic design assets in the world, including the tube map, our range of moquette patterns and of course the iconic roundel.

By incorporating the world famous Burberry brand with trusted TfL IP such as the roundel, we will link these two British institutions in a media first campaign.

Taking over London Fashion Week (LFW)

Featuring catwalk shows from the finest designers, glittering parties and exciting new trends, London Fashion Week is the ultimate fashion event in the capital. As the fashion glitterati descend on London, we want to put your brand at the heart of it. In a media first, and to celebrate this most stylish of occasions, we will work with Burberry to transform 4 stations along the Elizabeth Line.

The Elizabeth line launched in May 2022 to huge fanfare and in its first year of operation it has delivered over 250 million journeys. It has made London more accessible than ever before and enables passengers to explore the capital in a clean, comfortable and sleek environment. Its premium look and feel makes it the ideal canvas to promote one of London's top luxury fashion houses.

ELIZABETH LINE

How it will work

The activation will be live for the 5 days of LFW, it will incorporate 4 of London's and the Elizabeth line's most iconic stations - Paddington, Bond Street (home of Burberry), Tottenham Court Road and Farringdon. They are also 4 of the busiest stations on the network, meaning the campaign will reach 1,330,000 people over the 5 days it is live.

At Bond Street station, Burberry vinyling will guide customer to the exits and there will be signage directing to the flagship store, throughout the 4 stations there will be exhibits dressed in the latest Burberry range or showcasing iconic looks throughout the years and we will of course dress the roundel in Burberry Check. Furthermore, this activation will be supported across TfL social media reaching over 3 million people and can be amplified in partnership with Global to create a truly immersive and shareable experience.

We know from previous experience that utilising our assets with an instantly recognisable brand results in stunning visuals, whilst also driving huge earned media, reach and organic conversation

Developing the partnership

As well as acting as a hugely impactful standalone activation, there is also the unique opportunity for Burberry and TFL to forge a long-standing partnership. This year, we are excited to offer Burberry the chance to design a bespoke, co-branded moquette pattern that will feature in a themed carriage on our network – making Burberry part of the fabric of London. The moquette will:

- Display key elements of Burberry's brand
- Be used on a tube carriage for a minimum period of 2 years
- Used on promotional merchandise

In addition, Burberry will have full access to:

- The carriage for a launch event
- All advertising units in the carriage for 4 weeks a year
- Branding on all carriage panels
